Floormasters Launches Public-Private Partnership to Support Trade Skill Training Program for Northern California Job Seekers

Qualified Participants Eligible for Full-Time Positions with Competitive Salaries and Fully Paid Healthcare

HAYWARD, CA, January 12, 2015 – Floormasters, Inc. today announced the launch of a new training program for job seekers throughout Northern California. The first training session will be held in San Joaquin County in partnership with San Joaquin County Office of Education, Human Service Agency, Housing Authority of San Joaquin, Habitat for Humanity of San Joaquin, California Human Development, San Joaquin County WorkNet, Neighborworks, Visionary Homebuilders, and YouthBuild San Joaquin. Floormasters is working with several other counties and, conducting outreach to others, to make this program available across Northern California. Participants will receive apprentice-level training for installing both hard-surface flooring and carpet. Qualified participants will be eligible for full-time installer positions with the Floormasters team in Hayward, Peninsula, North Bay, Tri-County, East Bay, San Francisco, Greater Sacramento as well as Napa, Yolo, El Dorado, San Joaquin and Stanislaus Counties. Training will be led by Floormasters at no cost to participants or the partner organizations. All materials have been donated by Floormasters' partners, including Armstrong, Bigelow, De Soto Diamond W, Engineered Floors, Gallaher, Leggett and Platt, Mannington, Mohawk, Osborne Lumber and Patcraft.

“Training programs are an important part of the services that San Joaquin County offers,” said Chris Kleinert, director at San Joaquin County Office of Education (SJCOE). “We are excited about the opportunities that this program will open up to local job seekers. The Floormasters program not only provides job seekers with an opportunity to learn a trade, but also gives them a chance to secure a full-time job at the end of the training with a competitive salary and fully paid healthcare.”

“The Floormasters training program is a great example of how public-private partnerships create exponential value,” said John Solis, executive director at San Joaquin County WorkNet. “Everyone wins. The County adds a high-quality course to its education offerings; job seekers have an opportunity to learn a trade and secure a job; and the corporate partners gain access to a new pool of skilled labor.”

“Community involvement has always been a priority for Floormasters,” said Don Lau, president and chief executive officer of Floormasters, Inc. “In addition to working with a number of organizations to support affordable housing programs, we are committed to providing opportunities for local job seekers. This training program gives us an opportunity to reach a wider group and helps them learn a trade in a space that is understaffed and develop skills that will allow them to earn a good salary.”
